What is a TimberLike Door?

What is a TimberLike Door?

A TimberLike Door is designed to combine the durability of composite materials with the aesthetic appeal of real wood. These doors feature a robust 48mm thick multi-layered timber core, reinforced by 22 layers of cross-laminated timber, providing outstanding rigidity and resistance to thermal movement.

The exterior is finished with two foiled PVCu skins and colour-coordinated grained edge-banding, delivering a sophisticated and long-lasting appearance.

Unique Design Elements

A standout feature of these doors is the engineered bolelection moulding, which adds a touch of elegance that extends beyond just the panel or frame. This moulding is especially effective for raised panel doors, offering a timeless aesthetic while allowing for natural expansion and contraction.

For installers seeking innovation, TimberLike Doors transform the installation process by utilising pre-engineered components that significantly reduce both time and complexity. Their intuitive design guarantees a precise fit, minimising the need for adjustments and improving efficiency on every project.

TimberLike Doors present a low-maintenance option compared to traditional timber doors, effectively resisting common issues such as warping, swelling, and rotting. The foiled raised mouldings enhance the door's genuine wood appearance, making them a stylish and durable choice for a premium, high-end finish.
